The Ultimate Goal

I sat in the dressing room before my first major ____1____, feeling anxious. I looked like a pianist, but I didn't feel like one. My teacher, Kurt, had told me, "You've practiced, and you are well-prepared," but the thought that I would soon have to play for such a large audience was ____2____.

When the stage manager called me, I left the dressing room, feeling extremely nervous. The lights were so bright that I was almost blinded. "Where is the piano? I can't see anything!" My heart was ____3____. But then I forced myself to stay ____4____: You know the way. You know what you have to do. Trusting my ____5____ was the only thing that could keep me cool.

I began to ____6____ the space between the wings of the stage and the piano. The audience applauded and this wave of sound seemed to draw me across the stage. I ____7____ reached the piano and slowly took my seat, trying to keep my breathing regular.

I raised my hands and began to play, reminding myself of the final words of advice: go with the music, don't ____8____ mistakes and stay in the moment. Everything was falling into place. I wasn't thinking about winning or failing. The notes floated from my hands and the warmth of the audience encouraged me. I was ____9____ in the music.

That was the very first time I performed in the competition. A week later, I returned for the finals and won! I've also been accepted by the Juilliard School of Music. It might feel like I've ____10____ it. But, in reality, I know that I've only started.

Welcome to the Camp Association (CA)! We offer quality experiences where every child feels safe, valued, and celebrated. Let's explore a few of the most exciting camps in our community this summer!

The Voyage Camp (July 10th — August 5th)

At this popular camp, every camper chooses their own "Journey", creating a week packed with excitement and teamwork.

Ages: 9 — 16

Activities:

- Younger campers (ages 9 — 12) can pick things like fishing, swimming, and competing in friendly water games.
- Older campers (ages 13 — 16) can do all those things, plus new ones like climbing on the big rock wall and night hike.

The Summit Camp (July 15th — August 1st)

High in the Colorado Rockies, this is where science and fun come together. Campers mix outdoor adventures with hands-on science exploration.

Ages: 16 — 18

Activities:

- Study local wildlife on field trips.
- Learn basic survival skills in the wild.

The Spark Camp (July 20th — August 20th)

This camp is for young artists and performers. Guided by experienced art and music teachers, campers focus on color, rhythm, and imagination.

Ages: 9 — 16

Activities:

- Bring art to life through painting and digital design workshops.
- Sharpen musical talents with one-on-one guidance.

Global Gateway Camp (August 5th — August 25th)

At this camp, the world comes together! Campers explore new languages and cultures while making friends with people from different backgrounds.

Ages: 12 — 18

Activities:

- Choose from Spanish, French, or Chinese language classes taught by native-speaking teachers.

• Take part in “Global Village Day”, where campers share food, music, and performances inspired by different cultures.

Ready to start the adventure? For more information, please visit: www.ACamps.com.

A study published in Ageing, Neuropsychology and Cognition by researchers at the University of Birmingham found that monolingual (单语的) seniors who completed a six-month exercise programme were quicker at completing language processing tests compared to a control group — but bilinguals didn't show similar improvement.

In the study, participants who followed a six-month home-based exercise programme were asked to complete a mix of workout plans each week. Following the experiment, the exercise groups for both monolingual and bilingual participants greatly improved their fitness levels. They were tested before and after the exercise programme on their ability to recognize target words in a spoken sentence. The monolingual participants who followed the exercise programme were 7% faster at detecting the correct words after their fitness increased, while the bilingual participants showed very few language gains.

Dr Segart, an author of the study, said: “This is the first study we know of that establishes a causal link between improving fitness and language processing, particularly with older adults. Language processing is an important and interesting area of study, as the ability to communicate plays a key role in everyone's daily life. The results from the monolingual group provide strong evidence that increasing fitness correlates with better cognition (认知), highlighting the importance of regular exercise for healthy ageing.”

“Among bilingual participants in the study, despite seeing increases in the fitness levels within the exercise group, there was no relationship with improved scores in the language processing tests and the results were very similar to those of the control group. The finding might be explained by the lifetime patination (积淀) produced in their neural pathways thanks to the lifelong use of several languages — that is, a cognitive reserve that has already offset age-related loss. Older adults who are bilingual may enhance cognitive reserve, thus reducing the additional benefits gained from exercise,” he added.

While the study establishes a clear link between physical fitness and language processing, follow-up research is needed to explore the broader benefits of physical activity for cognitive development. Also, further research will focus on the lasting influence of exercise on cognitive health among other age groups, which may provide much better solutions to age-related language loss.

29. What happened after the participants followed an exercise programme?

- A. The monolinguals could identify certain words faster.
- B. Both groups made great progress in language learning.
- C. The bilinguals improved their speaking ability gradually.
- D. The participants were quicker at finishing cognitive tests.

30. What does Paragraph 3 intend to tell us?

- A. The value of the research.
- B. The key role of communication.
- C. The effect of language processing.
- D. The area covered by the experiment.

31. What does the underlined word “offset” probably mean in Paragraph 4?

- A. Resulted in.
- B. Taken off.
- C. Taken control of.
- D. Balanced out.

32. What will the further research most likely focus on?

- A. Measures to calm fear of age-related language loss.
- B. The effect of exercise on teenagers’ test-taking skills.
- C. Additional advantages of exercise for cognitive growth.
- D. The connection between exercise and language cognition.

C

I’ve been a psychology professor since 2012. In the past six years, I’ve seen students of all ages procrastinate (拖延) on papers, avoid presentation days, miss schoolwork, and let due dates fly by.

I don’t think laziness was ever at fault.

Ever.

I’m a social psychologist, so I’m interested in the situational factors that drive human behaviour. When you’re seeking to predict or explain a person’s actions, looking at the social expectations, and the person’s context — their day-to-day reality, their problems and hard times — is usually safe. Situational limits typically predict behaviour far better than personality, intelligence, or other personal qualities. So, when it comes to behavioral “laziness”, I’m moved to ask: what are the blocks to action that I can’t see?

There are always blocks. Recognizing those blocks and viewing them as reasonable — is often the first step to breaking “lazy” behaviour patterns (模式). It’s really helpful to respond to a person’s ineffective behaviour with curiosity rather than judgment. If a person’s behaviour doesn’t make sense to you, it is because you are missing a part of their context. Let’s look at a sign of academic “laziness” that I believe is anything but procrastination.

People think procrastinators cause their own problems. Putting off work sure looks lazy. Even the people who are actively doing the procrastinating can mistake their behaviour for laziness. You’re supposed to be doing something, and you’re not doing it. That means you’re weak-willed, not motivated, and lazy, doesn’t it?

For decades, psychological research has been able to explain procrastination as a functioning problem, not a result of laziness. When a person fails to begin a project that they care about, it’s typically due to either anxiety about their efforts not being “good enough” or confusion about what the first steps of the task are. Not laziness. In fact, procrastination is more likely when the task is meaningful and the individual cares about doing it well.

When you’re paralyzed with fear of failure, or you don’t even know how to begin a massive, challenging task, it’s extremely hard to get it done. It has nothing to do with desire or motivation.

The solution, instead, is to look for what is holding the procrastinator back. If anxiety is the major block, the procrastinator actually needs to take part in a relaxing activity. Being judged “lazy” by other people is likely to lead to the exact opposite behaviour.

People do not choose to fail or disappoint. No one wants to feel incapable or ineffective. There is always an explanation. There are always blocks. Just because you can't see them, or don't view them as reasonable, doesn't mean they're not. Look harder.

33. According to the author, what affects people's behaviour the most?

- A. Mental blocks.
- B. Limited experience.
- C. Personal qualities.
- D. Contextual factors.

34. Some people can't begin a project they care about because they _____.

- A. question its meaning
- B. are not strong-willed
- C. fear they can't meet expectations
- D. are confused about how to finish it

35. What does "the exact opposite behaviour" in Paragraph 9 most probably refer to?

- A. Talking to an advisor.
- B. Avoiding taking action.
- C. Quitting responsibilities halfway.
- D. Looking into the causes of laziness.

36. What does the author mainly do in this passage?

- A. Start a debate.
- B. Question a belief.
- C. Explain a situation.
- D. Introduce a method.

第二节(共 5 小题;每小题 2 分, 共 10 分)

根据短文内容, 从短文后的七个选项中选出能填入空白处的最佳选项, 并在答题卡上将该项涂黑。选项中有两项为多余选项。

We live in a culture addicted to winning. The spotlight shines brightest on the people who reach the finish line first, while those who come close slip into the shadows.

_____37_____ The inventor who had the right idea at the wrong time. The poet whose words only mattered long after they were gone. They seldom make headlines, but their efforts change the world in ways we only notice later. The truth is that the "almosts" aren't failures. Sometimes they push society forward more than the celebrated victims.

Nikola Tesla is remembered today as a genius (天才), but during his lifetime, he was largely overshadowed by Thomas Edison. Emily Dickinson's case is quieter but no less surprising. _____38_____ Only later would her simple yet powerful words change American poetry. Or take Katherine Johnson, whose math made spaceflight possible though her work went unmentioned for decades. _____39_____

When we honor the "almosts", we change what success means beyond headlines. Winning becomes about the courage to try, fail, and continue. _____40_____ Or the small business that fails, only for its owners to learn and build something more resilient (坚韧的). Even in art, those uncelebrated in their time often touch souls for future generations. The beauty of the "almost" is that it reminds us success is about daring to set out first. There's something deeply human about the "almosts". They remind us effort is valuable even without recognition.

_____41_____

Their stories belong to all of us because most of us are "almosts" in some part of our lives. Few take first place. Yet we matter.

- A. The truth lies in history.
- B. But what about the "almosts"?

- C. That struggle itself has meaning.
- D. Her “almost” wasn’t a failure at that time.
- E. Think of the silver runner who returns stronger, inspired by that close loss.
- F. These stories remind us not getting recognition doesn’t mean making no difference.
- G. Nearly all her poems sat in a drawer while she lived, considered strange or unfinished.

第三部分：书面表达(共两节，32 分)

第一节(共 4 小题;第 48、49 题各 2 分，第 50 题 3 分，第 51 题 5 分，共 12 分)

阅读下面短文，根据题目要求用英文回答问题。请在答题卡指定区域作答。

What if you quit your job, grabbed a camera, and hit the road with one simple question for every stranger you met. “Are you happy?”

Five years ago, filmmaker Eric did exactly that. The question surprised most people, but the answers he received were honest. For one woman, pure joy was her child. Another man credited his happiness to simple things: “food, fresh air, good weather.”

Eric posted the interviews online, and they quickly went viral, reaching 15 million people a month. Yet as his platform grew, he realized he was uncovering something deeper than fame or success. Happiness, he discovered, isn’t a product of what happens to us.

The most powerful proof came from a man with Stage 4 cancer. He was truly happy just to be alive to watch his son skateboard — an everyday moment he never thought he would live to see.

That’s when it clicked for Eric. He saw the dividing line between the happy and the unhappy wasn’t wealth, success, or perfect health. It was something simpler, yet more powerful: an appreciation for small things. “I think the difference,” Eric reflected, “is being able to say, ‘This sandwich is really making me happy.’”

He has come to believe that happiness is often a choice and a skill you can practice. When you concentrate on finding the good in things, you start to change the chemistry in your brain to turn unexpected changes in your life into positives. Over time, this way of thinking becomes a natural part of who you are.

So, when people ask Eric if he’s happy, he smiles. “Yeah,” he says. “Because I’ve got my family. I think people take that for granted. But if you have that, you really are in the top one percent of the happiest people in the world.”

42. How did most people feel about Eric’s question?

43. What is the dividing line between the happy and the unhappy?

44. Please decide which part is false in the following statement, then underline it and explain why.

➤ When you focus on finding the good, your life will change unexpectedly.

45. If Eric asked you “Are you happy?” right now, what would you say? Why? (In about 40 words)

第二节(20 分)

One possible version:

Dear Jim,

I'm so glad to hear you're coming to China to check out our cultural heritage!

Since you are into history, my top suggestion is the Terracotta Army in Xi'an. It is a treasure of ancient Chinese history. Seeing thousands of life-sized statues standing there is an amazing experience — it feels like traveling back 2,000 years!

I also recommend that you should climb Mount Tai in Shandong Province. It is not just a natural wonder but also a symbol of traditional Chinese culture and strength. If you make it to the top for the sunrise, the view is just breathtaking.

Both sites will help you truly understand the origin of Chinese culture. I am sure you will have an unforgettable trip!

Yours,

Li Hua
